

We partner very closely with the parents of all of our students. As it turns out, many of them are teachers.

Why do so many teachers choose St. Eugene School for their own children?

“One of the reasons I sent my daughter to St. Eugene was because of how prepared the students from St. Eugene are for high school. They are prepared for the homework load, they know how to study, and have good test-taking abilities...And most importantly, they are overall just good, caring people.”

Megan Renner, Math Teacher—Dominican High School

“Above anything, I’d say I send my kids to St. Eugene because I’ve seen the personal connection the teachers make with their students. I know how important that is to the learning process. They are invested in the students and so the students invest themselves in their own education. Also, the community feel of the school is very strong. I think that props students up for success.”

Paul Fleisch - Biology Teacher— Marquette University High School

“I did my homework when it came to choosing a school for my children. I asked colleagues, I looked at ratings, and I toured St. Eugene before we even put an offer on our house...the character development and strong Catholic identity at St. Eugene cannot be matched. We are forever grateful to belong to a parish and school that invests so much in the saints we are trying to raise.” Kate Junk, former high school math teacher

“The STEAM (science, technology, engineering, art, math) initiatives at St. Eugene are very impressive. As an educator, I know that so many future jobs are in those fields. STEAM does a great job preparing students to be creative problem solvers, instead of just fact memorizers. The campus is also a very beautiful place, from the exterior of the church to the playground. It just feels like a great place to send your kids to school. It looks holy, safe, and fun!”

Eric Blaufuss, 5th Grade, 4th Grade Math and Science Teacher—St. Eugene School

“All four of my children received a top-notch education, experienced diversity, embraced our faith, and forged lasting friendships. I fell so in love with the school that I began teaching here when my youngest was in kindergarten.

As I began this school year, I had a passing thought that I wish that my own children would have experienced the St. Eugene School of 2019-2020! We have come a long way in our ability to differentiate and help students navigate our 21st century learning—yet we still have this awesome sense of family and faith. We just keep getting better!”
